If you're doing document generation on the server side and you don't need to be working with Office documents as output, you'd generally use something like iText or iTextSharp, which would render the PDFs directly.

- 1. convert document
- 2. convert document to word
- 3. convert document from pdf to word

That recipe could be an XSL:FO file, the XHTML specification, a DocBook implementation, an XFA template.

For those that have used this, how successful were you? Would you recommend it? Can you save the OpenXML to PDF directly or would I need to make use of a 3rd party component? If a 3rd Party component is required, which one did you use and which one would you recommend? The nice thing about the Office OpenXML is that it's the language of Microsoft Office -- if you live your "office life" in Word and Excel (2007 and later), that's the format you want..
